Job Summary:
The Outreach Specialist provides professional support to incorporate arts-based activities into ongoing curriculum development for both children and adults and to pilot teach these activities in school and workplace settings. This person will provide key input to curriculum design for both adult and child curricula and will be included in the outreach teams that disseminate these curricula in these settings to pilot test the curricula and to engage in their further development. This person will also be co-teaching established curriculum as needed. In addition, this individual will be involved in working with scientists to identify specific processes and constructs that will be most impacted by the arts-based interventions and activities that will be designed.

This position will have the responsibility of being involved in the development, management, and implementation of a plan of work related to arts-based activities tailored to serve user groups (e.g., mindfulness-based curricula to school-aged populations and their teachers; healthy minds curriculum to cultivate well-being in adults). This position will synthesize feedback from user groups and teaching assistants/beginner mindfulness teacher/students regarding implemented curriculum; generate solutions to identify potential problems and carry out changes to the curriculum. It is expected that this person will mentor teachers and staff, meet with research staff on a regular basis, respond to outreach requests in multiple forms (e.g., may work with adult groups on new techniques and practices through emails, meetings, workshops, conferences, input to publications and other means) and provide general information on public issues (e.g., teaching of arts-based contemplative practices via online strategies, within the workplace and in public education settings).
